Company Profile:

Total Recall, the former makers of Data Recovery Toolkit, are now using a different approach to data recovery. Users now need to connect to Total Recall's web site and download the Disk Recover software (which fits on a single floppy) and run it on their hard drive. The program recovers what it can and then you must call Total Recall for a "key" to unlock the recovered data. The charge is based on the amount of data that the program can recover, and the size of the hard drive. If the Disk Recover program cannot recover anything, you can send your hard drive to Total Recall for professional data recovery.
